NO COMPROMISE

Senate Showdown On CIA Is Postponed

WASHINGTON—The showdown battle over how the senate should ride herd on the central intelligence agency (CIA) was postponed Tuesday until next week.

Chairman William Fulbright, D-Ark., of the senate foreign relations committee told the senate that his committee will wait until next Wednesday to file its formal report urging that three of its members be added to a new nine-member surveillance committee.

At the same time, the present informal watchdog subcommittee, which Fulbright aims to replace, reiterated its stand against the proposed measure.

After an hour-long closed meeting, Sen. Richard Russell, D-Ga., chairman of the watchdog group, said any compromise appeared "extremely doubtful."

Sen. Milton Young, R-N. D., a member of the watchdog body, was even more explicit. "I think there will be a battle on it now," he said.

Russell met late Monday with Fulbright and Sen. Eugene McCarthy, D-Minn., author of the resolution that asked for a new committee, but a hoped-for compromise failed to materialize.

After Tuesday's postponement, Russell indicated that when the report is filed, he will insist the proposal be sent to an appropriate senate committee for study. It is anticipated he will suggest either the armed services committee, of which he is the chairman, or the appropriations committee.

McCarthy will pick up some new support for his proposal today from his fellow Minnesota senator, Walter Mondale.

Mondale said he will support the McCarthy proposal in a senate speech because he feels "there is a need for inquiry into some aspects of the CIA activities."

Mondale also will suggest that the new committee look into "the degree to which our foreign intelligence activities may properly extend" into the U. S. itself.
